

STEAMER LUSITANIA WRECKED BY GERMAN TORPEDO OR BOMB GIANT LINER WRECKED OFF KINSALE, IRELAND STEAMER REPORTED BEACHED AND ALL PASSENGERS SAVED May Have Been a Bomb on the Vessel Instead of Torpedo

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

London, May 7.—The Cunard liner Lusitania was torpedoed by a German submarine at 2:33 o'clock this afternoon in the Atlantic ocean eight miles off the head of Kinsale on the south coast of Ireland.

Practically all reports received here state that the Lusitania sunk, but a Lloyds' report received at 5:28 p. m. said that she had been beached.

The Lusitania was bound for Liverpool from New York with nearly 1,400 passengers, including scores of prominent Americans on board.

At 5:25 o'clock this afternoon Lloyds issued a statement saying that the Lusitania was believed to have been blown up by an infernal machine on board the vessel, but stated that it was impossible to secure details.

"We have no details," said the Lloyds statement, "as to the passengers and crew, but it is considered probable that they are safe."

The first news that the Lusitania had met with disaster came in a dispatch from Queens-town, which said:

Lands End wireless reports the following distress call made by the Lusitania:

"Come at once. Big list. Position ten miles south of Kinsale."

Subsequently word was received here that all the available craft in the harbors on the southern coast of Ireland had been dispatched to the Lusitania's assistance.

At 4:59 p. m. a Queenstown dispatch reported the receipt of a message from Kinsale saying:

"About 20 boats of the sort belonging to the Lusitania are in the vicinity where she was sunk. About 15 boats are making for the spot to render assistance."

The following dispatch from Galley Head, about 20 miles west-southwest of Kinsale Head, timed 4:25 p. m., was later received by the admiralty:

"Several boats apparently filled with survivors of the Lusitania, sighted nine miles southwest. A Greek steamer is proceeding to assist."

In addition to the boats dispatched from Southern Irish ports, fast steamers were hurried from Liverpool, Waterford and Cork. British destroyers, which have been patrolling the southern coast of Ireland and St. George's channel, were sent at full speed toward Kinsale Head.

Despite the Lloyds' report that the passengers and crew of the Lusitania were considered safe, the belief was general here this afternoon that the loss of life might have been very heavy.

As soon as news was received here that the Lusitania had been sunk, the Cunard offices were besieged by anxious inquirers. At the same time scores of Americans visited the U. S. embassy clamoring for news of the Americans who were on board the Cunard boat.

At first the public was skeptical, believing it was impossible for German submarines to catch the big liner unawares. The admiralty has been at special pains to guard the Lusitania and other big liners in the belief that their services might be needed later as transports by the government. Not only were warships sent out to guard the Lusitania upon her arrival, but especial precautions were exercised to protect the liner lane south and east of Ireland.

Kinsale is a town on the southern coast of Ireland, 13 miles south-southwest of Cork. South of Kinsale the Head of Kinsale juts out into the Atlantic ocean. It is southwest of St. George's channel, through which the Lusitania would have to pass in order to reach Liverpool.

For several days German submarines have been operating in the waters along the south coast of Ireland. The British liners Centurion and Candidate were torpedoed yesterday off Coninbeg lightship, which is 87 miles east-northeast of Kinsale Head.

Captain Turner and other officers of the great liner did not fear any trouble from submarines upon the Lusitania's present trip. They laughed at the German warning and encouraged the passengers, telling them that the express steamer would be met in the Atlantic by British warships and escorted safely into port.

When Capt. Turner's attention was called to the German warning, he said:

"I wonder what the Germans will be up to next. It doesn't look as if they had scared many people with their warning, according to the looks of things on the pier and our passenger list."

Few of the passengers took the German warning seriously and none professed to feel any fears when the liner left New York.

"I hope the Germans do attack the ship," said Elbert Hubbard, in a parting interview. "I will never attempt to leave the vessel. If I go down with her I will get a place in the Hall of Fame and think of the advertising it will give me."

Representatives of the Cunard line were at the pier and they encouraged this feeling of safety. They scoffed at the possibility of a German submarine attack.

Many wild and conflicting reports were in circulation when the statement was issued by the Cunard line. One was that the Lusitania had been torpedoed at 8:20 o'clock this morning. Another was that the liner had been torpedoed at 2 o'clock this afternoon and had sunk in 30 minutes.

In giving out the statement, Cunard officials emphasized the word "unconfirmed," but stated that they were making every possible effort to ascertain the truth or falsity of the report. That they believed it true was indicated by the fact that they immediately transmitted by cable to England the full passenger list of the Lusitania.

The Lusitania sailed from New York for Liverpool last Saturday with 1,388 passengers, the largest number carried east bound by any trans-Atlantic liner leaving New York this year. Among the passengers were the Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Hubbard, David A. Thomas, multi-millionaire coal mine owner of Wales; Lady Mack Worth, a daughter of Mr. Thomas, and one of the few titled militant suffragettes; Alexander Campbell, general manager of John Dewar & Sons; Charles Frohman, the theatrical producer; Charles Klein, a well known American playwright; fifty-one representatives of Canadian firms supplying England with war material and at least one hundred British reservists who were going home to join the colors.

Just prior to the sailing of the Lusitania the German embassy had warned persons against going abroad, because of the dangers from submarines and the following advertisement was inserted in New York newspapers:

"NOTICE: Travelers intending to embark on the Atlantic voyage are reminded that a state of war exists between Germany and her allies and Great Britain and her allies; that the zone of war includes the waters adjacent to the British Isles; that in accordance with formal notice given by the Imperial German government, vessels flying the flag of Great Britain or of any of her allies are liable to destruction in those waters and that travelers sailing in the war zone on ships of Great Britain or her allies do so at their own risk."

"Imperial German Embassy, Washington, D. C., April 22, 1915."

The big Cunard greyhound was commanded by Captain W. T. Turner, of the British Royal Navy Reserve, with Captain J. C. Anderson acting as his staff officer. Both were rated as the best seamen in the trans-Atlantic trade, daring, yet cautious.

Just before the Lusitania pulled away from her New York pier stewards reported that 50 passengers had received anonymous telegrams warning them to cancel their passage. At the same time, it was said mysterious men, speaking with foreign accents, had passed among the passengers, warning them that a trip on the Lusitania meant death. Later it was denied that any telegrams had been received by passengers but warning had been given in other ways.

Extraordinary precautions had been taken by the Cunard line to prevent German spies from getting on board and to keep mysterious packets which might contain explosives from getting upon the ship.

Each passenger had to identify his own baggage before the ship sailed and all luggage was inspected. At the last minute 163 persons who had booked passage for Europe from New York on the Anchor line Cameronia were placed on board the Lusitania, the sailing of the Cameronia having been cancelled. She was chartered by the British admiralty just a few hours before she was scheduled to steam from New York.

General Manager Sumner of the New York offices of the Cunard line gave assurances that no information would be withheld.

"Under no circumstances will any information be kept back," said Mr. Sumner. "If the Lusitania has been sunk and we learn definitely that this has been the case, we will announce the fact. So far our cables have not been specific as to details. We have cabled to headquarters to send us all the information they have at once."

BREWSTERS TO MAKE SMOKELESS POWDER

The Aetna Powder Company of Pennsylvania, which has absorbed the Brewster powder works at Port Ewen, is having plans drawn for the erection of a large addition to the plant here. A new branch will be established for the purpose of making smokeless powder. Architects and contractors went over the ground on Thursday and plans will shortly be submitted for the new work. Nothing has been done toward rebuilding the structure which was destroyed by the explosion the other day. The Brewster plant has been completing a large contract for a foreign government and the building of the new plant would indicate that the belligerent has an idea that the war will last for some time yet. The Aetna company has a large plant in Ohio, besides in Pennsylvania factories, where caps similar to those made here are being turned out.

Egyptian markets ordinarily are filled with imitation liquors whose nature is so poisonous that habitual users are said to become insane. Martial law has made it dangerous for peddlers of such vile concoctions to attempt business near the British encampments. The British example might well be emulated by other civilized countries. The day of "forty rods," "squirrel" and "lightning" liquors has passed. Not only did they help rid the world of desperadoes whose chief aim in life was to consume as much as possible, but they have furnished material for thousands of picturesque short stories. As civilization advances it insists that the pace be kept in all branches of life, and worn-out methods must be replaced by those which are modern. Thus civilization demands that unless men can have good liquor to drink, it is better for them to do without any.

Putting the Atlantic Fleet on exhibition in New York harbor and the North River, beginning on Saturday, will allay the fears of such Americans as have come to believe that our country's navy has been allowed to rust and fall into decay and it will afford an opportunity to study the condition of the war vessels best fitted for service and by comparison to judge how many additional ships are needed. Ordinary laymen cannot determine this question, but unprejudiced experts can. The public inspection of the ships will create a favorable impression as such an inspection always does, and to foreign born residents who are anxious to embrace the United States in war because of our failure to espouse openly the cause of their native land it will serve the additional purpose of demonstrating that we have a navy capable of doing some damage at least. Undue public enthusiasm or criticism ought not to interfere with an investigation which will reveal the facts in regard to the navy. There has been much loose talk. What basis there is for the talk will not be disclosed by the visit of the Atlantic Fleet to New York; we must go deeper than displays for the truth about our naval conditions.

Ex-Governor Glynn's vehement denunciation of a direct state tax leads inevitably to the conclusion that he knows it is necessary and is exasperated because the present state administration made such prompt discovery of the exact situation in which he and his fellow office-holders left the state treasury. Calm and dispassionate talk by Glynn, backed up with facts, would tend to convince people of the correctness of his contention, but the nature of his statements detracts from their force and lends character to the deeply-grounded suspicion that he dug a pit for his successor which the latter discovered in time and avoided. If ex-Governor Glynn's statements are true, what explanation can be offered of the deficiency in the state treasury which makes it necessary for the Comptroller to negotiate a loan of between $5,000,000 and $8,000,000 to meet the state pay roll and other running obligations? This is the first since 1894 that such action has been necessary. Since the Legislature reorganized the state departments and lopped off useless jobs and wasteful salaries, the state pay roll has been reduced. If ex-Governor Glynn's contentions were correct and his administration had not exhausted the usual salary appropriations provided for this year, there would be money in the state treasury instead of a deficit. The Glynn administration continues to stand condemned by the facts of the case.

Elhu Root's reputation as a lawyer and statesman puts him so far ahead of most great men that he is almost in a class by himself, but on Wednesday he displayed a new side of his character when in the absence of the clergyman selected to offer the opening prayer for the day's session of the Constitutional Convention at Albany he himself invoked a divine blessing on the assembled delegates. There was no nonsense in Senator Root's prayer but it was strictly to the point and in the light of literary comprehensiveness was just such a prayer as might have flowed from the pen of Robert Louis Stevenson. His prayer was this:

"Almighty God, we pray Thee to guide our deliberations this day. Make us humble, sincere, devoted to the public service. Make us wise, considerate of the feelings and the opinions and the rights of others. Make us effective and useful for the advancement of Thy cause of peace and justice and liberty in the world. For Christ's sake. Amen." No one need be a believer in any particular religion or a follower of any particular denomination to subscribe to such an invocation. All denominational beliefs blend in one creed tersely expressed in the prayer of Senator Root. Broadly, for men in the public service the prayer expressed merely the earnest, highest hope for an ideal yet common-sense course of action which in the public service nowadays is often lacking.

A GOOD THEORY.

(By Our Woman Editor.)

In New South Wales, Australia, where women are rather active in public affairs, a penitentiary has been erected for women, which is said to be the finest institution of the kind in the world, the supposition being that in that country, with its advanced ideas the best is none too good for even those women deprived of liberty.

Whether it stands alone or not, on the ground of general excellence, and whether women are responsible for the improvement or not, it is pleasant to note that there is a practical effort to reclaim those offenders through an appeal to their better nature and an attempt to bring the best to the surface.

The new penitentiary is equipped with hot and cold baths. The cells are lighted by electricity, are well ventilated and have a generous supply of reading matter; and perhaps best of all, the walls are painted in attractive colors. One cannot easily reckon with all the variant dispositions that find their way to such places, but in the main it is pretty safe to say that an appeal to beauty is one step toward the softening process. And, in passing one never could understand why so much of drabness, drab walls, drab rooms, drab everything has been dominant in penal institutions. For, goodness knows, there has been drabness enough in their outside lives.

All the methods of grading prisoners according to new ideas have been adopted in the Australian institution, as well as the granting of special privileges whenever earned by good behavior. The wardresses in charge of the women have been chosen because of special fitness, are educated and refined, and everything is done to make the environment helpful and hopeful, and upon release, a committee of women in Sydney undertakes the responsibility of helping them to a better plane of life than they had known before.

While there is no desire to treat offenders against society and the law with greater consideration than is given to other unfortunates, honest but stranded, it really seems that the best that can be done for them in the way of showing what a woman may be when she tries is not lost effort. Many of them have had little opportunity to judge from observation.

For it seems that it must be just one more note of discouragement and grayness to a woman who has already had enough, when she finds herself within the walls of an institution, forbidding without and within, taken at her worst, rather than given an incentive to maintain her best.

Fortunately, however, Australia is not the only place that realizes the importance of encouraging rather than repressing. In our own country there is an increasing movement to instill in the hearts and the minds of wayward folk a real desire for permanent reform and to teach not only practical lessons upon how to work with the hands, but the equally helpful and wonderful instruction, how to be men and women, honored and honorable.

And in that happier scheme, one of the most important things would seem to be familiarity with brightness, walls which have lost their grayness, clothes that have outlived the old-time hideousness and with keepers who betray some faith and hope of reform in their unfortunate charges.

It is said that Japan is particularly progressive in its treatment of women prisoners and that the little Japanese woman who, through her own short-comings, finds herself behind closed prison doors, is given all sorts of educational, practical training, and is even taught that Japanese art of arts—how to serve tea properly.

And this because the new thinkers in Japan have grasped the fundamental truth that anything that increases a woman's self-respect and helps her believe in her own possibilities tends to uproot the evil in her and to bring out the good.

Human nature always will be weak, but surely there are many children, many more men and women, whose natures might be broadened and bettered if they were turned in a different direction, and helped in the turning.

One fancies that inmates of prisons and reformatories must spend some weary hours wishing they had been better taught how to live; for we more fortunate folk must remember that the desire for the pure and the true may be easily turned aside when the pure and the true are never in evidence in the environment in which they live.

One thing is pretty certain: The more encouragement and help are given, the more men and women will drift away from prison bars and the need for correction.

FRANCES SHAFNER.

LITTLE LAUGHS.

Drill Sergeant (to awkward squad)—"A rifle bullet will go through more than a foot of solid wood. Remember that, you blockheads!"—Boston Transcript.

Teacher—"This answer is short two cents. Go back to your seat and work it over." Boy—"Please, ma'am, I'd rather give you the two cents."—Judge.

"Flicker's company sent him down into Mexico to make motion pictures of the president." "And did he succeed?" "Rather. He stayed a week and posed three of them."—Life.

"What are your ideas as to the future of your party?" "I haven't any to express," replied Senator Sordum, "until I ascertain the ideas of the party concerning my future."—Washington Star.

"Was your request to Blifkins for the hand of his daughter successful?" "Not exactly. The old man demanded to know if I was prepared to support him in the same style his daughter was accustomed to do."—Baltimore American.

"You say this will be your farewell appearance?" asked the interviewer. "Yes," answered the eminent actress. "I shall retire from the stage never to return to it." "What is your reason for such a decision?" "My manager thinks it better for business to make every other tour a farewell engagement."—Washington Star.

Land Fishing.

Representative Vollmer, answering at a Washington luncheon an attack against his armament exportation bill, said:

"These men misunderstood my bill. They misunderstood it as completely as the young lady misunderstood the lasso."

"A young lady, pointing to the lasso coiled on his pomel, said to a cowboy:

"What is that line for?"

"To catch steers and horses, ma'am," the cowboy answered.

"Indeed," said the young lady, looking rather astonished. "And what bait do you use?"—Washington Post.

The Coming Spirit.

"This war will go on and on," said Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, who has given a two-hundred-and-fifty-thousand-dollar field hospital to the belligerents.

"This war will go on and on," she repeated, sadly, "and the side that is getting the going of it will display the spirit of little Willie."

"Little Willie's father, as he laid on the slipper, said:

"Willie, this hurts me more, far more, than it does you."

"Then keep it up," said little Willie, grinding his teeth. "Keep it up, dad, I can stand it."—New York Tribune.

An Actress on Economy.

Sarah Bernhardt, reproached for her extravagance at a dinner which she gave during her last visit to New York, said:

"I agree with Octave Mirbeau that the cause d'epargne, the savings bank, the stocking, is the curse of every country. Hoarding is ignominious."

Madame Bernhardt laughed. "I shall always be proud," she said, "of the answer I once made to a little girl who asked me what economy was."

"Economy, my child," I answered, "is a way of spending money without getting any fun out of it."—New York Tribune.

On the Job.

Irate Country Gentleman (white with anger at being disturbed): You book canvassers make me so angry with your con-founded nerve and impudence that I cannot find words to express my indignation.

Canvasser (jumping with enthusiasm): Then, sir, I am a great help to you. I have here the very thing you need—a dictionary of the English language, containing all the words and slang phrases known, and only five shillings. Take it, and you will never be at a loss to express yourself again.—Tit-Bits.

Napoleon Outdone.

In a small town there was a veteran of the Civil War who was called Colonel Bingle. He was stored full of anecdotes about his life as a soldier, which had won him the unbounded admiration of a certain little boy in the town who was of a martial cast of mind. But never had the boy's admiration for the Colonel found such complete expression as when he remarked to a little playmate:

"Come on, Jimmy, let's play soldiers. You be Napoleon Bonaparte—I'll be Colonel Bingle!"—New York Times.

THIRD CORPS UNION TO MEET IN KINGSTON

The Third Army Corps Union, which was organized at Brandy Station, Virginia, on September 2, 1863, held its annual meeting at the Hotel Manhattan, New York city, on Wednesday. Major and Mrs. James H. Everett and Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Hart of this city attended. Major Everett was elected president and invited the society to hold its next annual reunion in Kingston.

GIRL, 7, TO GIVE PUBLIC MATINEE OF DANCES.

New York, May 7.—This is the era of interpretative dancing; even the children are developing a genius for the art.

The newest and tiniest of the juvenile interpretative dancers is Lillian Emerson, daughter of Mrs. N. D. Emerson, of 150 West Twenty-fifth street, New York, who, though only seven years old, has risen to such perfection that she is going to give a public matinee all by herself in a local theatre soon. Moreover she is going to interpret through the art of the dance the musical works of the greatest composers.

Two years ago, when only five years old, little Miss Emerson appeared before Dowager Queen Alexandra at Marlborough House, London, and more recently has danced in the drawing room of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught at Ottawa.

WOODSTOCK.

Woodstock, May 7.—The auction sale at the residence of the late Mrs. Longyear will be held May 7.

It is reported that the studio of Miss Bracher has been broken into and is open to the public. This studio is located in the rear of the public school building and is remote from the highway for some distance. Saturday night a party was reported to have been in possession of the property having a fire outside and one in the fireplace of the studio. A beer keg and numerous bottles told the tale of the nature of the gathering. Last week two girls disappeared from school and were seen going to this studio. Also two young men in the place were seen going to the same studio about the same time. When the girls were missed at the school the teacher sent word to the trustee officer to come and make an investigation. That officer promptly responded and the parents notified of what had transpired. It would be well for the parents of this village and locality to look closely after the welfare of their children. It is a mistake for parents of this section to permit their girls to be at the studio alone after dark. We wonder whether Miss Bracher is aware that her studio has been broken open and is used after the above manner.

The annual school meeting was held on Tuesday evening and an unusually large representation was present. $1275 was voted for school expenses for the ensuing year. Wesley France was elected trustee. The trustees for this district comprise the following names: O. W. Mosher, Dr. M. B. Downer and Wesley France.

Edward Burton has been busy moving the old meat market back and digging a cellar on the lot between Lewis Brothers and Orville Elwyn's.

Polyglot Britain.

Norman French is still the official language of the Channel Islands. It is rather a surprise when one begins to count the different languages spoken within the borders of the United Kingdom. How many people would guess that there are still at least five living tongues used among us? There is English in England, Welsh in Wales, Erse in Ireland, Gaelic in Scotland, and French in the Channel Islands, while Cornish in Cornwall and Manx in the Isle of Man have scarcely yet faded entirely, and in Whitechapel even the post-office prints its notices in Yiddish—London Mirror.

The Five Pointed Star.

In astronomical figures stars of the different magnitudes are shown with three, four, five and six points. On many of the ancient armorial bearings the star has six points and is called a "star" while that with five is called a "mullet." This figure of the star with five points was in use as far back as can be traced in history. It was called a pentacle, or pentagram, and came to have a mysterious symbolical meaning.

NEW SUMMER NECKWEAR

We are showing the most diverse selection of correct new neckwear in this community—the popular batwings in polka dots, Roman stripes, floral designs and plain colors.

Also four in hands in De Joinville stripes, dreadnought greys, soldier blues, oriental colorings, etc., etc.

THE HOUSE OF KUPPENHEIMER

As these fine spring days rush happily by, this house of good merchandise is fairly humming with activity—serving more patrons, doing a larger volume of business than ever before in our eventful history.

Truly the reward of good work is more work—especially for a store enlisted in the service of so enlightened a public as ours.

And surely the fact that men and young men are coming to the Live Store in such increasing volume is full of meaning.

It means for one thing that now, as never before, people know the worth of every penny of every dollar and want equal value in return.

In means furthermore that they know exactly where such values are to be found.

HOW ARE YOUR MOLARS?

There are six upper and lower front teeth to cut the food. There are twenty back teeth to grind it. Twelve of these are called molars.

These molars are the last three teeth on each jaw. The word "molar" means "mill stone." They grind and grind the food like a mortar and pestle.

Asking "How are your molars?" is like asking "How is your health?" Yet the molars are often sadly neglected. If they are not sound have them filled or crowned.

Probably some of your molars are decayed. If so, get them filled or crowned at once and they will last you through life.

Extractions 50c. Silver fillings, $1; Gold fillings from $2; Gold or Porcelain Crowns, $5; Bridge Work, per tooth, $5; Plates, $10 and $15. Open evenings to 9, Sundays 9 to 1.

CHIC PARISIAN FROCK.

Elaborate Afternoon Gown
From Across the Waters.

BEAUTIFUL IMPORTED GARMENT.

In spite of the war Paris finds time to make wonderful frocks for the American importers, though Dame Rumor says her women are not wearing many gorgeous frocks during this terrible war. However, here is a sample of the handwork of one great Parisian couturier who designs frocks even in the trenches.

Wavy goldenrod satin is draped in this instance with silk net which has an elaborate braiding of tan soutache. A girle of the satin shows beneath the bolero bodice, which is also made of net and braided. Smart boots of two shades of tan leather are worn with this dress, and a parasol in blue and tan is carried. A hat of blue is trimmed with daisies, completing this interesting costume.

DOMESTIC KINKS.

New Methods Used in the Household Learned From Professionals.

Window washing is one of the tasks dreaded by many women, especially the outside of the windows, which are hard to reach. Notice the men who make a profession of window washing, who wash the windows of large stores, and see that they have developed several excellent washers, chief of them being the type which utilizes the so called rubber "squeeze" for drying the panes of glass.

This consists of a galvanized container of triangular box shape which will hold over a quart of water. At one edge of this box is fitted a pad of absorbent felt. At another edge is a rubber squeeze. The whole is equipped with a short metal handle, into which a long wooden handle is to be fitted. When in use the container is filled with water, to which are added a few drops of ammonia or alcohol. The pad is then allowed to soak and the whole device moved vertically up and down the window. When the window has been so washed the other edge of the device is turned toward the glass and the rubber squeeze used, which practically dries the panes of glass. This is the first device of the kind which adapts the commercial washer to the home.

Another kind of washer with points of advantage is a tongue-like device fitted with bunches of cloths at each end. These are dampened and the tong fitted over the window casing so that one cloth operates on the outside, the other on the inside pane. This is particularly good in the upper stories, where it is dangerous to sit outside or impossible to reach the windows by any handied device. In cold weather either alcohol or kerosene will prevent water freezing as it is used on the windows.

GUEST ROOM FANCY.

While the careful hostess will not overload her guest room with a horde of useless trinkets that will not fit any other place in the house, she will appreciate this latest novelty in a dainty guest room accessory and may hang it with a free conscience on the dressing table for her next feminine visitor. It is a light tinted chiffon bag, a shapeless affair gathered on to a ribbon covered embroidery hoop. In it are piled perhaps a dozen individual powder puffs of softest cotton. Each bit of fluffiness is tied with a piece of narrow ribbon of the color chosen for the bag, and a jaunty bow offers a comfortable way of holding the diminutive puff when in operation. The real practical value of such a dainty bag lies, of course, in the fact that a guest returning from various pleasure jaunts more or less soiled as to face and fatigued as to body will relish a clean bit of cotton for applying the refreshing bit of alcohol, powder or rouge.

Good to 'Em.

"They're certainly good to their children."

"Yes. They don't even make them wash their hands and faces before supper."—Detroit Free Press.

HOW SAVINGS GROW.

Ben Franklin's Proof That "Money is of a Prolific Nature."

After publishing his "Poor Richard's Almanac" for twenty-five years and giving thirty-two years more as a thrifty teacher of his country Benjamin Franklin put into his will a provision to demonstrate the power of accumulated savings.

To the cities of Boston and Philadelphia he left $5,000 each. The money was to be put out at interest and allowed to accumulate for a hundred years. At the end of that time, he figured, each city ought to have $650,000. He directed that at the end of the hundred years $500,000 should be invested by each city "in public works which may be of most general utility to the inhabitants." The rest should then be put at interest for another hundred years, when the accumulation should be divided, one-quarter to the city and three-quarters to the state.

When the first hundred years were past Boston found that she had $663,923 to her credit from the Franklin fund. Taking $500,000, Boston established a training school for mechanics. The remaining $163,923 was put out at interest again.

Philadelphia's experience with the original fund of $5,000 was about the same as Boston's.

Now, Franklin figured that at the end of the second hundred years, when the fund is to be distributed, each fund ought to amount to about $20,000,000. But Boston's fund at the end of the first hundred years exceeded Franklin's estimate by $13,923. So here's a problem:

If Boston handles the fund as successfully in the second hundred years as she did in the first how much in excess of $20,000,000 will it be?

Franklin's demonstration was impressive; $5,000 will go into $663,923 how many times? Nearly 133 times. Wasn't he amply justified when he said, "Money is of a prolific nature?"

What sort of a demonstration can you make?—John Oskison in Chicago News.

THE LAWYER'S FABLE.

It Took the Sting Out of His Opponent's Florid Oratory.

A barrister who was possessed of an abnormally loud voice was making an eloquent address to a jury. His case was fairly strong; he was much in earnest, and his trumpet tones made the rafters ring. In a hurricane of sound he closed his argument and sat down. The jury looked serious and thoughtful, and were evidently much impressed. The opposing barrister had a face like a hatchet and a thin low voice—the exact opposite of his learned friend. When it became his turn to address the jury he began:

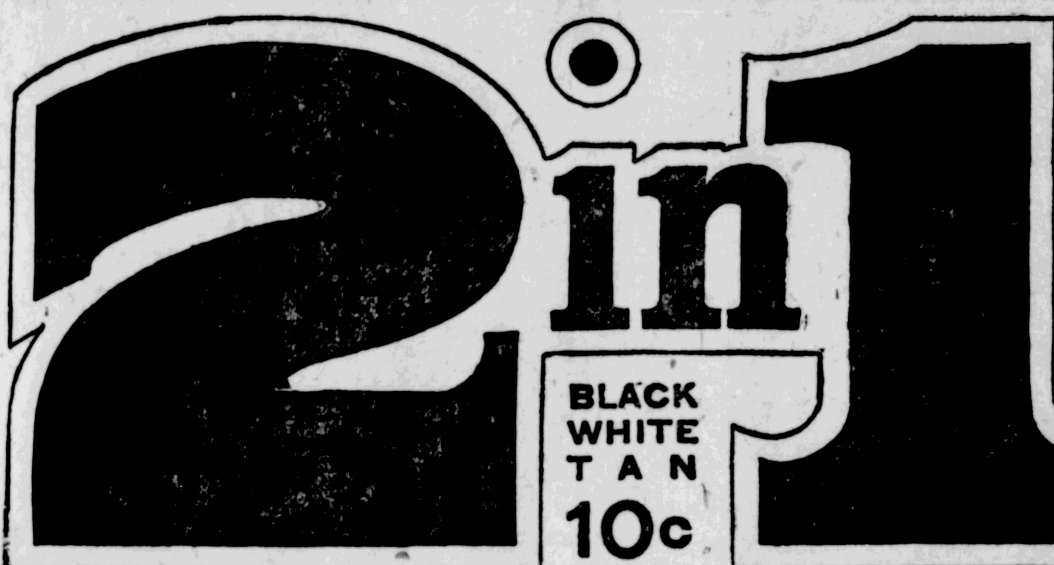

"As I listened to the rather thunderous appeals of my learned friend I recalled a fable which I heard in my youth. A lion and an ass entered into a compact to slay the beasts of the field and share the spoil. They divided the work; the ass was to go into the thicket and bray and frighten the animals out, while the lion was to lie in wait and kill the fugitives as fast as they appeared. Well, the ass sought the darkest part of the jungle and, lifting up his awful voice, brayed and brayed and brayed. There never was heard such a fearful din.

The ass was quite intoxicated with his own uproar and thought he'd return to see what the lion thought of it. With a light heart he went back and found the lion looking doubtfully about him, pale in the face and trembling in every limb. "What do you think of that for braying?" said the exultant ass. "Don't you think I scared them?" "Scared them?" repeated the lion in an agitated tone. "Why, you'd have scared me if I didn't know you were a jack-ass!"—London Graphic.

PLAN ADOPTED

The board of education Thursday night adopted the bonding plan prepared by Mayor Canfield whereby the entire bond issue for the construction of the new high school, purchase of the site and equipment of the building will be paid during a period of twenty years instead of ten years.

Following the reading of the communication from Mayor Canfield, which was published in full in The Freeman on Wednesday night, Trustee Bernstein, chairman of the finance committee, offered the following resolution:

"Whereas the board of education has received a communication from Hon. Palmer Canfield, Jr., mayor of the city of Kingston, submitting plans and table for the amortization of high school bonds with the suggestion that this board approve the same by resolution and transmit such approval to the mayor and common council.

"Therefore be it resolved that the board of education does approve the plan of the mayor as set forth by him in the following table for the amortization of high school bonds.

(Here follows the amortization table of bonds as set forth in the table prepared by Mayor Canfield and included in his communication published in The Freeman on Wednesday.)

"Be it further resolved, that a copy of this resolution be certified by the president and clerk of this board, under seal of the board, and be delivered to the mayor and common council of the city of Kingston by filing the same with the city clerk."

Bonds For Equipment.

The resolution was adopted, as was also the following resolution providing for a bond issue of $30,000, which was provided for by Mayor Canfield's amortization table, for the purpose of purchasing furniture and equipment, etc., the resolution like the foregoing being introduced by Trustee Bernstein:

"Whereas the construction of the new high school building has been completed with the exception of the installation of a part of the plumbing fixtures, and

"Whereas the building is now ready for the installation of equipment including, furniture, desks, steel lockers, fume hoods, window shades, manual training and domestic science and laboratory equipment which must be supplied and installed in the building before the opening of school in September, 1915, and

"Whereas the grounds about the building must be improved and roadways and sidewalks must be built,

"Therefore be it resolved, that pursuant to section 179 of the charter of the city of Kingston, the board of education of the city of Kingston determine and it does hereby determine that it will be necessary to raise by tax upon the taxable property in the city of Kingston or by issuance of bonds pursuant to section 179 of the charter of said city, the sum of thirty thousand ($30,000.00) dollars, for the purpose of paying for furniture and fixtures including manual training, domestic science and laboratory equipment for the high school building and for improvements to the grounds around said building including roadways, sidewalks and lawn.

"Be it further resolved, that the common council of the said city of Kingston be and it is hereby requested to provide for the raising of the aforesaid sum of thirty thousand ($30,000.00) dollars with which to pay for the aforesaid furniture and fixtures and for improvements to the grounds.

"Be it further resolved, that a copy of this resolution be certified by the president and clerk of this board under seal of the board, and be delivered to the mayor and common council of the city of Kingston by filing the same with the city clerk."

Lawyer Merritt's Vigorous Protest.
Before the adoption of either resolution of motion of Trustee Atkins the privileges of the floor were extended to Attorney Francis C. Merritt, who said he appeared as a taxpayer, not to do any kicking so far as the present high school building was concerned, but to call attention to the fact that the people who were paying money to others are not by any means the taxpayers of the city.

"In the first place," said Mr. Merritt, "you paid $55,500 for the site for this new building. Not one of you gentlemen in your own business, acting for your own interest entirely, would pay any such price for this site."

"Secondly, you started to excavate for the cellar for this building and in a few weeks you expended the sum of $8,605.80. If any one of you gentlemen was having excavating done for your own buildings, and you discovered that the excavating even for a building of this size had cost you $8,605.80, you would think you had been stung. And that's what the people of this city think today about this board of education."

"Value Received" for Building Itself.
"So far as this building itself is concerned, you have received dollar for dollar for the money expended; there is no complaint against the building and I hope you will acknowledge that I am fair enough to say so."

"Now the people of Kingston—the majority of them—are poor, and every dollar you add to our tax burden impedes to that extent the progress and prosperity of the city and prevents growth of our industries and our industrial success. One of your members has been president of the Chamber of Commerce, and I ask him if the tax rate in this city is an attractive proposition to put up to would-be newcomers?"

"I prefer listening to what you have to say," said Trustee Bernstein.

"That seems to be the attitude of this board altogether," said Mr. Merritt, who continued.

Another fact I wish to call to your attention is that the passing on of a burden is only passing on the burden from those who are unwilling to bear it to those who can't help themselves. It was a serious mistake to start such bonding and it is more serious to finish it in this way.

"Now in regard to this site, I am informed and I dare say not one of you is aware of the fact that the same site fifteen years ago was offered to the city of Kingston for $25,000, yet you paid $55,500 for it. If this fact be true, and I have no doubt about it from the source of my information, I dare say there is not one of you who in private experience would have proceeded privately as you have proceeded as officials. I know from my own knowledge that the taxpayers of this city have been absolutely muzzled and without any way of helping themselves. I don't say you have done anything wrong, but do say you have not conducted the business of this board as you would conduct your own business."

"The lot just below here is a corner lot and was bought by the Knights of Columbus as a site for their new home. The title to that property was vastly more complicated than the title to this property, but they had a search and abstract of title made for the sum of $25, while for that work for this property you paid $500. Can any one of you gentlemen say how that money was spent? There are many good lawyers in Kingston and one of the best, who is well acquainted with real estate work and searching has told me he would have been willing to make this same search for $75. Where did the balance go? Do any of you know? This being so, things in this city have come to a pretty pass."

"This position which each of you holds is an honorary position. You receive no salary but only the honor of holding it, but whether honorary or salaried, whether appointive or elective, it is expected that you will conduct the business of the taxpayers as public servants should, and no matter how you hold the position you are at all times public servants."

Praise for the Building.

"In the construction of this building, from what I know personally and from what I have been told by competent builders, I do not believe you could have saved one cent. The only trouble is that you started wrong. I am here as a small taxpayer of the city to protest against the mistakes that have been made and to ask you to conduct the balance of your business as you should."

"Examining further the statement of the cost of this building and site, I find that you paid $480.50 for surveying and plans for grading. I am under the impression that it is the duty of our own city surveyor to perform such work. My information is that the city engineer is paid a salary for performing city work, whether it be for the superintendent of streets, or under the direction of the common council or for the water board or any other city department, and this is one of the city departments just the same as the others. It was the city engineer's duty to do this work. You inform me that it was done by another engineer."

"Will Rise Like Ghosts."

"I am merely stating facts, which some day will rise like ghosts and slap you, just as Roosevelt's letters to Platt have arisen from the dead past to smite him."

"What John D. Rockefeller has said about saving the pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves applies just as well to public boards having charge of the expenditure of the taxpayers' money as it does to individuals seeking to save.

"Another item in the table of expenses is $719 for extra steps. I don't know what changes were made, I am frank to say, but it would seem to me that if the last five steps were added at that price, it was a reasonable price for the fellow who put them in, but not for the taxpayers."

"There are charges here for fees of lawyers. I do not question the fees of any lawyer for he probably earned them, but we have a corporation counsel in this city whose duty it is to render advice to all the city departments, and if he is not doing it we ought to know why."

"I find here also some other items: for instance, a piano, costing $855 net. That ought to be a very fine piano at that price. We have a beautiful building and would like to put beautiful things in it and we should have everything suitable if possible, but I ask that while you are doing these things you give an occasional thought to the small taxpayer."

Mr. Merritt at this point asked President DeWitt and Trustee Kearney whether an offer of $5,000 had not been made at first to Mrs. O'Reilly for her corner lot.

Surrogate Gill asked what this argument had to do with the resolution under discussion and Mr. Merritt said he was protesting against the further bond issue of $30,000.

Turning to Trustee Bernstein, Mr. Merritt said, "You laugh, Mr. Bernstein, and I haven't any doubt that it seems to you a laughing matter and nothing more."

"It is," replied Mr. Bernstein, "from the fact that you are absolutely ignorant of the facts."

Mr. Merritt in conclusion said he was opposed to the $30,000 bond issue on the ground that it was not needed, and that if any part of it was to be expended for anything except the absolute necessities for completing the building, he wished to make additional objection.

So far as the training school and equipment was concerned, he said, it was the best thing that any board of education ever had done, and if the bond issue was entirely for such equipment and training, he would come forward and say he would willingly pay his share.

So far as the building and what it contained were concerned, there had been no complaints, but in the preliminaries in his opinion and in the opinion of many others exorbitant prices had been charged and there was just cause for complaint.

Surrogate Gill said that those matters had passed into history and the proposed bond issue was needed to complete the building by equipping it, and he moved the previous question.

Both resolutions offered by Trustee Bernstein were unanimously adopted.

President DeWitt gave a brief outline of the various steps that had been taken to securing the high school site, both under John J. Campbell when he was president of the board, and under himself. Mrs. O'Reilly's first figure for the site was $100,000; the committee had been authorized to offer her $30,000, and the price agreed on was a compromise figure.

The request for a search and abstract of title, he said, came like a bolt from the blue. It was made by the Rondout Savings Bank, but the wisdom of having it made became apparent when the bonds came to be sold, as the first question asked by the bond-purchasers was in regard to the title. In having the search made, by reason of the fact that he was county clerk, he had saved the city from $250 to $300.

"This building is a monument to the culture and education of the city," said President DeWitt. "It was built on honor and throughout the construction it has been above the taint of suspicion of graft. We welcome taxpayers and their opinions and we welcome criticism."

Routine Matters.

Superintendent Michael reported that Arbor Day, or May Day, exercises would be held at the various schools this morning and invited the members of the board to attend them.

Superintendent Michael also reported that he had procured from Henry McNamee, the contractor in charge of grading the grounds, an estimate for ploughing, harrowing, fertilizing and seeding the grounds for $285, and on motion of Surrogate Gill the matter was referred to the superintendent with power.

C. V. A. Decker was heard on behalf of the Symphony Society, which had been granted the use of the high school auditorium for the three days' spring musical festival. At the previous meeting of the board, a resolution had been passed giving the use of the auditorium on condition that the school children be allowed to attend the afternoon rehearsals free of charge. The Symphony Society requested that in order to regulate the attendance it be allowed to charge an admission of ten cents each for the pupils, teachers who accompanied them being allowed free.

Trustee Bernstein moved to reconsider the former motion, which was carried, and on motion of Surrogate Gill the Symphony Society was granted the use of the auditorium on the same terms as the Chautauqua.

Superintendent Michael called attention to the fact that door checks ought to be placed on the four vestibule doors on account of their plate glass panels, and the matter was referred to the building committee.

The use of the auditorium was granted to the Grand Army of the Republic for a memorial service on Monday evening, May 31st, on the same terms as the Chautauqua.

Bills of Henry McNamee for $2,508, on account of the grading contract, and of Joseph McNellis & Company for $1,816.77 for the balance due on the lighting contract were ordered paid.

Superintendent Michael was granted a four days' leave of absence. All the members were present except Trustee Washburn.

INSIDE A VOLCANO

Looking Down Into Kilauea's
Lake of Boiling Lava.

LIKE A PIT OF LIQUID FIRE.

A Play of Flaming Colors So Dazzling
In the Darkness of the Vast Crater
That It Terrifies the Spectator—A Veritable Fountain of Fire.

According to all the rules of school geographies, a volcano ought to be situated on top of a mountain; it ought to throw out stones and ashes and molten lava; its crater should be in the shape of an inverted cone, and should emit terrifying noises; periodically it should overwhelm a village or two. Kilauea, on the island of Hawaii, conforms to none of these specifications. It has thrown out neither stones nor ashes since it annihilated the army that was marching against Kamehameha, almost a hundred and fifty years ago. It retains its lava within its own crater, which is not shaped like an inverted cone. The sides are from 100 to 700 feet high and 7.85 miles in circumference, and the floor covers 2,650 acres. The volcano seldom makes terrifying noises—at least of the kind heard in imagination by a schoolboy. Thousands of people descend into the crater annually, and not one has ever been injured.

The walk across the floor of the crater, about two and one-half miles, is over a hard lava bed, more or less up and down, since lava hardens quickly and remains as it flowed, in great ropes and ripples. A few yards from shore—one comes naturally to call the bank "shore"—a ragged crack is crossed by a wooden bridge. At the time this crack opened, a large party was in the crater. They stayed long because they were delighted with the unusual activity of the lake and had no idea that this activity extended beyond the pit of fire until at last they started to go back to the hotel.

It was night, and as they approached the northern bank of the crater their lanterns suddenly revealed a huge fissure directly across their path. Already molten lava was bubbling up at the bottom. They followed the edge of the crack, keenly conscious, undoubtedly, as they turned to keep parallel with the crater wall, that they were on the inner edge. At last they found a spot where the lava had split unevenly, leaving a projecting ledge on which it was possible to stand, and so to jump to the other side. The whole experience, with the thought of sinking to the fires beneath or of being overwhelmed by the lava slowly rising in the fissure and the utter helplessness of their situation, was enough to test the most fearless.

Kilauea is really an enormous quiet crater with an active inner pit. This cavity is, perhaps, 1,000 feet across, and its precipitous sides lead down to a lake of molten lava several acres in extent, sometimes higher, sometimes lower in the pit. This is Halemauau, which is commonly translated (although incorrectly), "the house of everlasting fire." It is certainly the house of the goddess Pele.

By daylight the lake of fire is a greenish yellow, cut with ragged cracks of red that look like pale streaks of stationary lightning across its surface. It is restless, breathing rapidly, bubbling up at one point and sinking down at another; throwing up sudden fountains of scarlet molten lava that play a few minutes and subside, leaving shimmering mounds that gradually settle to the level surface of the lake, turning brown and yellow as they sink. As darkness comes, the colors on the lake grow so intense that they almost hurt the eyes. The fire is not only red; it is blue and purple and orange and green. Blue flames shimmer and dart about the edges of the pit, back and forth across the surface of the restless mass. Sudden fountains paint blood red the great plume of sulphur smoke that rises constantly.

Sometimes the spurts of lava are so violent, so exaggerated by the night, that one draws back terrified lest some atom of their molten substance should spatter over the edge of the precipice. Sometimes the whole lake is in motion. Waves of fire toss and battle with each other and dash in clouds of bright vermillion spray against the black sides of the pit. Sometimes one of these sides falls in with a roar that echoes back and forth, and mighty rocks are swallowed in the liquid mass of fire that closes over them in a whirlpool, like water over a sinking ship.

Again everything is quiet; a thick scum forms over the surface of the lake, dead, like the scum on the surface of a lonely forest pool. Then it shivers. Flashes of fire dart from side to side. The center bursts open, and a huge fountain of lava twenty feet thick and fifty feet high streams into the air and plays for several minutes, waves of blinding fire flowing out from it, dashing against the sides until the black rocks are starred all over with bits of scarlet. All sensations are submerged in a sense of awe. This vision of the earth building forces at work is a picture so overpowering that it is burned into the memory for all time.—Hawaii, Past and Present.

Decision on Domestic Animals.

One who keeps a domestic animal, such as a cat, having neither mischievous nor vicious propensities, is not liable for damages done by it while trespassing; but if the owner knows it to be vicious he must use reasonable care to restrain it and prevent it from doing injury.—Bischoll vs. Cheney, Conn., 91 Atl. 660.

Simply This.

"Come in and have it charged," was the inviting sign in front of a place of business in a certain town. A stranger, being somewhat low in funds, walked in briskly. "I understand that I can get things charged here," he said, addressing one of the employees. "Only storage batteries," replied the other man.

Cost of the Family Keep Lowered at Messenger's

If the husband will not, then the wife should inquire into the cost of the family keep. Many a dollar is wasted in the purchase of meats that are dear at any price because of their inferior grade. Always it is good economy to pay a cent or two more and obtain the best to be had. "Cheap," tough meats are too often used as a magnet to draw the unwary because they are lower in price than the better grades. Our qualities and prices are always right and as a consequence this market is a busy scene of activity every business day. We cannot offer patrons meats that are not prime, because we never buy them ourselves.

The Ford—a great utility because it serves all the people. The popular choice, because it gives better service at a lower cost. Popular again, because it is simple and easily understood by everybody. And with all the refinements it is still the same dependable Ford, and sells for $60 less than last year—besides the plan of sharing profits with the buyers.

Buyers will share in profits if we sell at retail 300,000 new Ford cars between August, 1914, and August, 1915.

MIDDLETOWN PLAYS ULSTER TOMORROW

Ulster will play another home game tomorrow when Middletown will contest them at the Athletic Field. The Tigers have busted their losing tendency and are now on the upward climb to a successful season. According to gossip, Middletown has a poor team, but they may perform the unexpected because they are still sore over the football defeat by Ulster last fall.

That the Ulster batters are not giving their opposing outfielders extra work is shown by the slim team average of .188. However, it is true that they have faced some pretty classy twirlers. Downer is the only one meeting the ball on the nose, having a .333 average. Terwilliger and Pehleman have second honors with .267. Terwilliger is fastest on the base lines, seven stolen bases being credited to him. The team is also pretty poor in the fielding department, having an average of .909. Peyer and Kiernan are spotless in fielding.

The batting and fielding averages follow:

Memorial Day Plans.

There will be a meeting held on Monday evening at Kingston Academy to talk over plans for the observance of Memorial Day on May 31. The meeting has been called by the officers of the G. A. R., and all interested are urged to be present. Memorial Day will be the fiftieth anniversary of the close of the civil war and the question of whether the occasion shall be suitably observed will be discussed at the meeting. The G. A. R. will assist in the usual Memorial Day exercises at the cemetery when the graves of the soldiers will be decorated. They have also secured permission from the board of education for the use of the high school auditorium on Memorial Day evening when it is expected that addresses will be delivered. It is hoped that all interested in observing the anniversary of fifty years of peace will be present on Monday evening.

Another Noted Artist.

The Kingston Symphony Society are delighted to announce that the name of Miss Virginia Los Kamp has been added to the already remarkably fine list of artists who will appear on the evening of Tuesday, May 25, "Artists' Concert" night of the Musical Festival. Miss Los Kamp, like Mr. Gardner, the noted violinist, will contribute her music on this occasion, in appreciation of what the Kingston Symphony Society is doing in the interest of good music in this part of the world. Her splendid, rich, velvety contralto voice, and charm of personality will add inestimably to the evening's music, and it goes without saying that Kingstonians will hail with delight this announcement of Miss Los Kamp's appearance at the Music Festival.

Basses and Tenors Tonight.

Tonight there will be a special rehearsal of the basses and tenors who are to sing in the "Creation" chorus. In order to bring the efficiency of the bass and tenor parts up to the standard already reached by the sopranos and altos, Conductor Coke-Jephcott asks that all enrolled male members of the chorus attend this and subsequent rehearsals. Eight o'clock to night at the Y. M. C. A. building.

HORTON HAS EMPORIA HEARSE MONOPOLY

George K. Horton, Ulster county's well known real estate dealer and politician, is making a hit in Emporia, Kansas, where he is engaged for the time being in the livery business and according to letters written to friends in Kingston is making a success of his new venture. Mr. Horton's many friends will be glad to hear that he is enjoying good health.

At the present time in his livery business he is working eleven men and has thirty-one horses. He also has five hearses, three of which are as good as any in Kingston. George has the exclusive undertaking business and ambulance calls of the city and surrounding country. He says there is not another hearse within ten miles of where he is located and so if the people die they have to let George bury them. There is no question but that he is a crackjack at the business.

What the natives do for pasture is causing Mr. Horton considerable wonder. He writes that while Emporia is a bright little town a person can not get a drink in the state for love of money, and can't even buy a pack of cigarettes or play a game of pool.

Mr. Horton is also becoming acquainted with some of the famous residents of the state. The other day Walt Mason, who writes for the Emporia Gazette, came into his office and George sold Walt a second hand delivery wagon that he had on hand. Walt is reported to be getting $100 a day and if George had known who he was selling the wagon to he could have asked and received a bigger price for the wagon.

Mrs. Shady Ill.

Mrs. George F. Shady, widow of the celebrated New York surgeon, who is well known in Ulster county, is ill of heart trouble at her home at Dobbs' Ferry, and when a slight blaze was discovered in the kitchen of her home Wednesday night, Thomas Johnson, superintendent of the estate, was compelled to ask the firemen who were summoned to work quietly on account of her illness. Chief James H. McCabe and Assistant Chief Coffee extinguished the fire while the rest of the firemen remained at the gate. Mrs. Shady returned from the south early this week ill, and Johnson feared the noise and bustle of the arrival of the firemen might cause a relapse.

COOK BREAKS SCHOOL RECORDS

"Bill" Cook proved the star of the Bryant-Hawthorne athletic meet which brought to a close the last May Day exercises in the history of Kingston Academy by breaking two of the school records this morning. He won the shot put with a put of 40 feet 1 1/2 inches and the 220 yard dash in the fast time of 23 2-5 seconds. The athletic meet was won by the Bryants with a total score of 58 points to the 26 points garnered by the Hawthornes.

Ideal weather greeted those who gathered on the academy green this morning to witness the last May Day exercises to be held by Kingston Academy, and they were well rewarded for being present, as the student council in charge of the arrangements had spared no effort to make the exercises the best in the history of the school.

The school met in general assembly at 9 o'clock and about 10 o'clock the May queen and her attendants passed through the study hall and took their position in the procession, which was headed by the Kingston Academy Drum Corps and marched around the campus for the last time. The procession was headed by the drum corps, followed by the student council committee, the prime minister, May Queen and her attendants, girls in the May pole dance, girls in the drill and the members of the senior, junior, sophomore and freshmen classes.

After passing once around the campus the May Queen took her place upon her throne and her subjects passed in review. The last May queen to preside at the annual festivities was Miss Lillian Metcalf, and her attendants were the Misses Dorothy Leighton, Helen Elmendorf, Olive Hammond, Leone Grant, Ethel Skelton and Arpha Lawson. The prime minister was William Carl.

After the ceremony of crowning the May Queen and girls of the freshman class gave a very pretty May pole dance under the direction of Miss Margaret Angle. This was followed by a drill by the girls of the senior, junior and sophomore classes, dressed in white. The drill was under the supervision of Miss Ruth Humphrey.

The track meet between the two literary societies of the school followed. The 100 yard dash proved a walk-away for the Bryants as there were no entries from the Hawthornes. The dash was won by "Bill" Cook in the fast time of 10 2-5 seconds; French was second and Lezatte was third. This event was won last year by Cook in 11 seconds.

Wheeler won the 880 yard dash in the fast time of 2:33 3-5 seconds. This was much faster than his time last year when he also won first place. Reynolds was second and Bishop was third.

"Bill" Cook came to the front again in the shot put with a heave of 40 feet 1 1/2 inches; Gill was second, Reynolds, third, and Herb, fourth. Last year Cook won the event with a put of 35 feet 9 inches.

Cook also took the 220 yard dash in 23 2-5 seconds which was over 2 seconds faster than the same event last year which he won. There was only one other entry in this event, Herb.

Wheeler won the broad jump with a leap of 19 feet. French was second with a jump of 18 feet 11 inches, and Wood was third with a jump of 16 feet 7 1/2 inches.

The high jump proved a pretty contest between Dana and Wilson, and was won by Dana with a leap of 5 feet 2 inches. Wilson was only able to clear 5 feet 1 inch. French was third with a leap of 4 feet 11 1/2 inches.

Wheeler came to the front again in the 440 yard dash, winning first place in 6:5 1-5 seconds. Lezatte was second and Riser was third.

The meet was brought to a close with the mile run which was won by Bishop in 5 minutes and 34 3-5 seconds. Taylor was second, Reynolds was third and Winne fourth. Taylor led up to the last lap but did not have the sprint and Bishop shot to the front and led to the finish by a number of feet.

Cook, of the Bryants, and Wheeler, of the Hawthornes, tied for first honors, each securing 15 points.

The track officials were C. N. Behrens, starter; judges, Archie Leighton, Clifford Bennett and Harry Strick. Arthur Jones was clerk.

At the close of the meet the medals and ribbons were awarded to the successful athletes by the May Queen.

The student council committee in charge of the festivities were Ruth Humphrey, Margaret Angle, Alfred Schmid, Lillian Metcalf, Ulysses French, William Carl, Fred Van Etten and George Greene, chairman.

That their efforts toward making the last May Day exercises to be held by Kingston Academy were successful was shown by the interest manifested and the able manner in which everything was conducted.

The last May Day exercises of the old academy will go down in local history as the best and most successful ever held during the years that old K. A. has been in existence.

Young People's Society Election.
At the annual meeting of the Young People's Society of the Spring Street German Lutheran Church held Thursday evening, most gratifying reports were read by the president Fred Schantz and the various officers. The treasurer Harry Riser reported a total income of $561.85 and the expenditures of $147.12. The election of officers took place and a number of new members were received. The officers of the society are: Albert Salzmann, president; Miss Lillian Wolf, vice-president; Fred Ahlers, recording secretary; Carl Will, financial secretary; Harry Riser, treasurer. After the transaction of business, refreshments were served and music was furnished by a Victoria.

BEAUTIFUL EYES

A Case of Mistaken Identity.

By C. S. THOMPSON

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

"Ray, Mr. Van Norden, there's a girl been coming here the last two days."

Young Van Norden looked up with boyish blue eyes, rather annoyed by the loud voice in the quiet of his private office. He was further struck by the man's ugliness—a florid cheek, with smallish, keen eyes and a square set jaw.

"I beg your pardon," said young Van Norden, pointing to a chair. "Your name?" he went on with emphasis.

"Me? Oh, it's all right, Mr. Van Norden," answered the caller, placing his derby hat on the floor. "I'm from the central office. Murdock's my name. This girl—she's been looking for you, as I get it. Missed you both days. So I take it she'll be on hand this afternoon."

"Well, what of it, Mr. Murdock?" "If I ain't mistaken, Mr. Van Norden, she's coming for money. Just hear what she has to say. She'll tell a sob story if I have my guess. We'll be waiting outside, in case you happen to need us."

Mr. Van Norden let his caller out by way of the front office—a room with a blackboard on which a boy was chalking up stock quotations.

He returned to his private office, where about an hour later he found himself staring down at a pair of beautiful dark eyes, very soft and feminine. Her cheeks were pale, but with out powder. Her gown had simple yet pleasing lines, with a satisfying harmony of color, a shade of tan with trimmings of fine white lace.

"I beg your pardon," he said when the office boy had gone. "But I didn't get the name."

"Miss Summerton," she answered, holding aside a small hand bag. "Miss Summerton," he went on when she had become seated. "The boy said you wished to see me on a personal matter, I believe."

"I'm coming on rather an odd mission," she began with a touch of color. "I want to interest you, Mr. Van Norden, in a case of charity."

"What is odd about it?" "Well, nothing—that is, excepting the fact that he once traded with your firm."

"Who is the man?" "His name is Wentworth—James Wentworth."

"Wentworth," he said, wheeling in his chair so that he faced the other way. "Yes, father once did business with a man named Wentworth—a James Wentworth. A tall, handsome man with black hair. A regular athlete. If I'm not mistaken. Always in the top of fashion."

"He isn't anything like that now," she answered slowly. "He's an old man with snow white hair, and altogether he's quite a pathetic figure."

He caught a tremulous note. "Did Mr. Wentworth send you?" he asked.

He turned around not too suddenly, yet in time to see her withdrawing her handkerchief from her cheeks.

"No; he didn't send me," she answered, staring at him.

"Yet you come for him," he said almost harshly.

"Yes; I come to you. The truth is Mr. Wentworth is dying in poverty. He may live a week, maybe not that long. Three days ago he expressed a wish—a simple wish that he might see the green fields again. Mr. Van Norden, I didn't know but you might have the money. It would only be a loan."

He slowly took up his pen and after a moment reached for his check book. "Will $100 be enough?" he asked.

"Yes, indeed," she quickly answered. "I'm glad to be able to do it for you, Miss Summerton," he said.

She seemed to be avoiding his gaze. "Miss Summerton," he said, seeing the color in her cheeks, "not that it makes any difference, tell me how did you come to know of Mr. Wentworth and of his dealings with our firm?"

"I know his daughter very well," she answered, squarely facing him.

The telephone rang. "He took up the receiver. "Miss Summerton," he said the next moment, putting down the telephone and getting up. "It seems that I have an urgent caller outside. Would you mind waiting—just a moment? There was something else I wished to say. Just a word."

She followed him to an inner room, the door of which he opened for her. Then he softly closed the door and, taking out a cigarette, struck a light and went idly smoking to the front of the house, where he stood facing his caller. His caller was the ugly man of square jaw and florid cheek, who was nervously holding his derby hat.

"She in there?" asked the central office man.

"I let her out by the side hall," said young Van Norden, indicating the door. "No; you didn't, did you?"

"Look here, Murdock," spoke up young Van Norden, "that girl isn't a crook."

"That being the case," came the sneering answer, "why didn't you call us in?"

"I thought I'd save her the annoyance of a third degree examination."

"You gave her a check?"

"Yes."

"She told you a sob tale?" "A rather pathetic story, yes."

"Say, Mr. Van Norden, pardon my saying it, but you've done a fine trick. Why, say, that girl's a well known crook."

Murdock went on staring at him, at first with a pitying smile; then he threw down on the desk a police photograph, with a card which read:

Martha Benjamin, swindler, aged twenty-four, height five feet four inches, of American parentage, large brownish eyes, very fine teeth, never more than plainly dressed. Her game usually played in the financial district.

"The eyes," said young Van Norden nervously. "I can see a difference in the eyes."

"Let me see; you say she went down by the back elevators?"

"I simply said she went out by this side hall door."

Young Van Norden went as far as the front office and stood a moment, with a sense of unrest, listening to the staccato writing of a market ticker. He then returned, lit another cigarette, and after he had smoked awhile he went to the inner room.

"I beg your pardon, Miss Summerton," he said. "I didn't mean to be quite so long."

He found himself gazing into her eyes again—eyes of wondrous beauty.

"Mr. Van Norden," she said, without spirit, "I couldn't help but hear just now. The transom was wide open."

"Yes, I wanted you to hear," he said, facing her.

"Mr. Van Norden," she said, "I couldn't bring myself to tell you before. But there seems to be no help for it. My name isn't Summerton. I'm Mr. Wentworth's daughter."

He stood staring at her suddenly, with hardness in his eyes; then after a while he gave himself up to a sense of relief.

"My dear girl," he said, "I can hardly believe that any one of Mr. Wentworth's family should come to us. The last we heard of him, some fifteen years ago, he accused my father of being a crook, a thief."

He came to a sudden stop. "Just a moment, if you please," he went on, going to the front office.

"Tommy," said he to the boy at the door, "have Mr. Murdock come right up, and don't wait to knock."

He turned to the girl.

"Perhaps you aren't familiar with the details of their quarrel?" he said, seating himself again. "The trouble was over a notification. Mr. Wentworth said he gave orders to sell. My father said not. Later on it developed Mr. Wentworth was in the right. The mistake was due to the reading of a telegram. My father immediately drew his check for the full amount, but the check came back. Mr. Wentworth said he wouldn't be an object of charity."

"Yes, I know," she quickly answered. "But I thought if you were only half human, in a time like this—"

"My dear girl," he said, playing with his unit cigarette, "when Mr. Wentworth returned my father's check, torn up, some fifteen years ago, this money was then put to his credit, and that amount, together with the interest at 6 per cent up to date, now makes in all, I believe, some $40,000."

"My father never spoke of this. Mr. Van Norden," she remarked, "you believe me, don't you, when I tell you I'm Mr. Wentworth's daughter?"

He found her eyes uplifting him again, and yet he purposely hid his feeling.

"I see—you still have your doubts," she said.

"There's only one thing I want to clear up," he answered uneasily. "Can't you wait—just a moment?"

He returned to the window, awaiting his man, and presently the office boy ushered him in without knocking.

Murdock looked first at the girl, then at young Van Norden, with a puzzled air.

"Beg your pardon, Mr. Van Norden," he began.

"No; it's all right," answered young Van Norden. "I want you to meet this young woman, whom you've been following here for two days."

Young Van Norden turned to her. "Miss Summerton," he said to her, "Mr. Murdock is from the detective bureau at police headquarters. He has a photograph—a rather good likeness—I want him to show you."

Murdock slowly took out his police picture, handing it to the girl, at the same time regarding her with keen eyes.

"Mr. Murdock," said young Van Norden, speaking to him, "I called you in because, it may be, you'll be running into her more or less from now on. Miss Summerton has an account with us."

Young Van Norden then turned to the girl, who had made her examination of the photograph.

"Miss Summerton," he said, "Mr. Murdock is detailed in Wall street to secure off any crooks who may show a desire to operate below what he calls the dead line."

Murdock took the picture from the girl, saying: "You look something like her, don't you think? But you ain't tall, and, as your friend here was saying, Miss Summerton, there's real beauty in your eyes."

"A clear case of mistaken identity," said the detective in the front office. Young Van Norden smiled to himself and immediately returned to the girl.

"Mr. Van Norden," she began, now almost at the point of tears, "you believe me now?"

"My dear little girl," he said, unable to control his feeling any longer, "yes, indeed, I believe you. But that isn't the point. Half an hour ago I gave you a check, which, I believe, you accepted. It's yours by right. Come, hadn't you better see what it says?"

She took out her check, unfolding it, and read, "Pay to the order of Mary Wentworth $40,000."

His wish.

"It is a woman's fate to suffer in silence," she volunteered.

"If they'd only let us suffer the same way," he rejoined.

Whereupon she remarked that he was a hateful, mean, stupid, contemptible, despicable, beneath contempt man. So there!—Philadelphia Ledger.

Imagination.
"Robert," said the teacher to a small pupil, "can you tell me what imagination is?"

"Yes," he replied the little fellow; "imagination is what makes a fellow think a bee's stinger is three feet long after he gets stung."—New York Globe.

BELMONT-ANDREWS WEDDING TO BE HELD IN NEWPORT.

Newport, R. I., May 7.—The present season has brought forth many interesting engagements. One recently announced was that of Miss Margaret Andrews, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul A. Andrews, of Newport and New York, to Morgan Belmont, a son of August Belmont. Though the date of the wedding has not yet been set, it has been definitely announced that it will take place here.

Miss Andrews was introduced to society three years ago and has been prominent in the social life of Newport each summer.

Mr. Belmont, who is the youngest son of August Belmont, was graduated from Harvard last year. He is one of the best known polo players in this country.

SOCIETY NOTES.

The telephone call of Mrs. C. N. Reed, society news reporter for The Freeman, has been changed to 1012-W.

Invitations have been issued by Mrs. W. S. Kenyon, Jr., for "Music," Friday evening, May 14, half after eight o'clock, at St. Mary's school hall.

The Emanuel Culture Club of this city gave a private dance at the Wiltwyck Inn Thursday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Sam Bernstein acting as chaperones. Muller's orchestra furnished excellent music which comprised all of the new and old-fashioned dances. There was an intermission of about 30 minutes during which time all partook of dainty refreshments in the Wiltwyck dining room. Dancing followed again. Those who attended were Anna Casper, Anelda Van Bramer, Edna Silverstein, Marion Suskind, Celia Friedman, Jenette Kaplan, Sarah Silverman, Libbie Molloy, Anna Afron, Sophia Kaplan, Helen Stern, Ray Wolff, Hattie Weber, and the Messers. Maurice Friedman, Samuel Beloff, Ben Furmansky, Harold Bernstein, Benjamin Suskind, Samuel Kaplan, Frank Finley, William Cism, Sidney Wolf, Sam Mann, Louis Silverman, Joe Hagan, Sam Poyer, Sam Afron, Sam Harris. All departed at a late hour bearing in mind the good good time which will be remembered by all.

A party of twenty-four of Kingston's society folk motored to Shiel's well known hostelry at Lackawack Thursday evening and enjoyed a supper and dance that was indeed a delightful event. There were six autos called into commission to take the party to their destination. Landlord Shiel served one of his delicious trout suppers for which he is famed and justly so. The guests were seated at one long table, which throughout its entire length was decorated with vases filled with crimson roses. Music for the dancing was furnished by Malsenhedler. Those who attended the supper and dance were the Hon. and Mrs. George Washburn, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Osterhoudt, Mr. and Mrs. C. Gordon Reel, Dr. and Mrs. George Chandler, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Tremper, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Herbert, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Fitzpatrick, Mr. and Mrs. Everett Fowler, the Hon. and Mrs. Joseph M. Fowler, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Washburn, Mrs. George P. Hutchins and Mrs. D. G. Gale of Saugerties and David Burgevin, T. A. Horton, W. A. Van Slyke and Roger H. Loughran.

Thomas-Bailey.

Miss Allie Bailey of New Paltz and George Thomas of Highland were married on Tuesday evening at the Presbyterian manse in Highland. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. George H. Scofield. Mr. Thomas is superintendent of the Highland Orchard Company.

Sheely-Rhinehart.

Miss Sarah E. Rhinehart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Rhinehart, and Marion E. Sheely of Gramhamville were married at the home of the bride on Wednesday by the Rev. Sheldon Vandeburg of Shawangunk. Mrs. James Rhinehart acted as matron of honor and Emily Van Vleet was the flower girl. About sixty guests were present.

D. A. R. Hears of National Congress.

The regular meeting of Wiltwyck Chapter, D. A. R., was held at the Chapter House on Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Philip Ellings, vice-president, presiding in the absence of regent, Mrs. W. R. Harrison. One new member of Wiltwyck Chapter was announced. Mrs. Elmer Lockwood, of Brooklyn. This meeting was of special interest as being the one when the chapter members in this city were to hear of the doings of the recent continental congress held in Washington, D. C., from their own delegates to the congress. Mrs. L. M. Wood gave an excellent official report of the meeting, telling of the welcoming address by the president general, Mrs. William Cummings Story; of President Wilson's address at the opening of the congress and of the routine business transacted. She also gave a graphic account of the reception at the White House and other notable reception and told of the election of national officers, resulting in the re-election of Mrs. William Cummings Story as president general. Mrs. De La Port gave a quite dissimilar but most entertaining account of the congress in a sketchy vein which told of the people met there; the more intimate and personal touches, with many a humorous bit, that delighted all who heard her. She also brought to the home chapter three lineage books from the congress.

Announcement was made that Miss Rebecca Martin had been made president of the Children of the American Revolution, local chapter, and she urged that the children and grand-children of members of Wiltwyck Chapter, D. A. R., should be urged to attend a meeting of this society at the Chapter House on the afternoon of Saturday, May 15. The program for the afternoon was in charge of Mrs. William M. Davis and Mrs. G. G. Honness. Miss Mildred Harrison sang very sweetly, "A Little Gray Home in the West," by Sohn, and "Elegie," by Massenet, so delighting her audience as to be obliged to give encores to both numbers. Miss Ethel Johnston, a pupil of Mrs. J. Irving Wood of the Kingston Conservatory of Music, played two remarkably fine piano selections, "Arabesque," by Debussy, and "La Papiilon," by Grieg. So pleased were the audience with Miss Johnston's artistic rendition of both numbers, that she too was obliged to respond to each with an encore.

The hostesses for the afternoon were Mrs. W. N. Martin and Mrs. Fessenden. The tea table was most artistically and attractively decorated with a huge circle of apple blossoms.

Prosperous Sunday Schools.

At the annual meeting of the teachers of the Sunday schools of the Spring Street German Lutheran Church held on the 29th of April, the treasurer, Carl Will, reported a total income of $726.43 and the expenditures of $556. The total number of pupils and teachers of the German and English Sunday schools is 261.

HER ABSENT BOY.

When a Mother's Lot is One of Wistful, Weary Waiting.

It's mighty hard to be a mother of sons in Homeburg. I worked in the postoffice for a year once—handed out mail—and I got to know just exactly what most of the mothers in town wanted. I could please them with a new magazine and mystify them with a circular or a business letter.

But if I wanted to light them up until they took the shadows out of the corners as they went out I would give them a letter from a son way off somewhere making good. The best of them didn't write any too often. Once a week is pretty regular, I suppose, from the other end, but you should see the mother begin to come in hungry again the second day after her letter came.

And when a boy came home successful and prosperous and his proud mother towed him down Main street it used to go to my heart to see the wistful looks of the woman friends.

There is hardly a family in Homeburg of the right age which hasn't a grownup son off at war somewhere—fighting failure. It's grand when they win, but I hate to think of some boys who haven't come back.—George Fitch in American Magazine.

Just Like Eve's Apple.

A fruit supposed to bear the mark of Eve's teeth is one of the many botanical curiosities of Ceylon. The tree on which it grows is known by the significant name of "the forbidden fruit," or "Eve's apple tree." The blossom has a very pleasant scent, but the really remarkable feature of the tree, the one to which it owes its name, is the fruit. It is beautiful and hangs from the tree in a peculiar manner. Orange on the outside and deep crimson within, each fruit has the appearance of having had a piece bitten out of it. This fact, together with its poisonous quality, led the Mohammedans to represent it as the forbidden fruit of the garden of Eden and to warn men against its noxious properties. The mark upon the fruit is attributed to Eve.

The Elgin Marbles.

The adventures of the Elgin marbles, now in the British museum, began in 1803, when they were wrecked at Cerigo on their way from Greece to England. It took the divers three years and a vast sum of money to fish up the Parthenon relics. It is believed that Lord Elgin spent over £74,000 in procuring these priceless fragments left by Turkish vandals, who would probably have made an end of even these had the earl not rescued them in time. The house of commons voted £36,000 for their purchase, so that the enterprising peer lost heavily in cash and suffered from a public agitation against his alleged "vandalism, rapacity and dishonesty," as well as from Byron's "Curse of Minerva."—London Chronicle.

Grip of the Bulldog.

It is a commonly accepted belief that nothing short of being pried loose will induce a bulldog to give up his grip on another dog or on an intruder, but this is a mistake. A little household ammonia poured on him as near his nose as circumstances will allow will make him let go immediately. The fumes of ammonia are so overpowering that a dog cannot possibly maintain his grip and his breath at the same time.

Her Business.

"It's no use trying to steal a march on that pretty girl at the glove counter."

"Why not?"

"She has a way of making every one show one's hand."—Atlanta Constitution.

1,918 PERSONS ON THE LUSITANIA

By Telegram to The Freeman.

Liverpool, May 7.—S. J. Lister, general manager of the Cunard Steamship Company at Liverpool gave the following statement to the I. N. S. at 6:12 o'clock this evening: "We have received information that the Lusitania was torpedoed at 2:33 o'clock today when ten miles south of Old Kinsale Head."

"Just previously the Lusitania had sent out a wireless call 'Come at once, we have big list.' That was the last heard from her."

"The Lusitania had 1918 souls aboard, including 665 of the crew and 1253 passengers."

"It is apparent that the Lusitania was sunk without any warning."

Mr. Lister added that if any passengers were saved, as he hoped they would be, they would be landed on the Irish coast and brought here.

The Kings of Denmark.

The dust of the Danish kings is kept in a great cathedral at Roskilde, an old town twenty miles from Copenhagen. Every year the entire royal family always pay a visit to Roskilde in obedience to an ancient custom. On one of the pillars are marks showing the height of Peter the Great, Nicholas, the Iron Czar, Alexander III, of Russia, the king of England and many other kings. The cathedral was built in the eleventh century. It has two mighty towers, which can be seen at a long distance. The oldest grave is that of King Harold I, who died in 987.

Feeding by Law.

A law to punish by imprisonment persons found guilty of overfeeding was actually promulgated in France during the reign of Charles IX, when the cost of living reached an unconscionable height. It was then ordained that no person should eat more than three courses at a meal, the amount to be served at each course being also prescribed. Heavy fines were imposed for any breach of this law.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Points for Mothers

Regarding Environment.

A study of sound educational principles shows that the greatest perils as well as the greatest opportunities present themselves largely during A B C age and that therefore a careful study must be made of all requirements when providing a child's environment.

Specialists point out that at the start every child is greatly handicapped. Therefore he should be so nourished that every part of him works with a minimum amount of friction. We must rid ourselves of the idea that the youngest child requires the teacher of the least ability and skill. This is a viciously harmful idea. If children are wisely directed in the beginning there will be less cause for complaint afterward, less cause for men like Herbert Spencer to condemn the method upon which the advancement of the community rests.

Seguin tells us that we must educate the study of the senses, train the faculty of speech, the art of receiving, storing and expressing impressions, which is the natural gift of infants, and then we shall not need books to fill up the emptiness of our teaching until the child is at least seven years old.

If the education of the senses is neglected all after education partakes of a haziness, an insufficiency, which is impossible to cure. Here, then, is a chain of reasoning: that mothers and teachers of the very young child cannot escape. Examine the Montessori plan or Hilber's or any one of the methods based upon the fundamental principles advanced by Froebel, Seguin—indeed by educators that reach back to the beginning of all things—and you will find in every instance that the greatest reliance is placed upon the sense training accompanying these methods. These students of education grasped the underlying principles and then worked out their own methods for action.

Night Terrors Are Serious.

Night terrors are due to fault in the nervous system which makes it easily excited by any slight irritation, even though that irritation be in some remote part of the body. The child awakens suddenly with violent screaming and gives abundant evidence of great fear. This may be repeated night after night or at less frequent intervals. Night terrors usually attack children between the ages of three and eight years, and in nearly every instance the attack comes on within two or three hours after the child has retired.

The face of the child shows the extreme terror which he is in. His eyes are widely opened and generally fixed upon one object. Sometimes a clew is given to what frightened the child by his crying out the name of the thing or person. During the attack the child will cling to others for protection. This period of extreme terror lasts usually only a few minutes, but it may be prolonged to nearly half an hour. Following this is a period during which the child recognizes persons and his surroundings, but for a considerable time he remains in a state of mild fear and dreads to be left alone.

Night terrors should never be allowed to continue untreated. They are indications that there is a serious fault in the nervous system, and this should receive the most careful and thorough consideration.

American Toys.

To take the place of the lead soldier made in Germany one firm has made a steel soldier very durable and quite neutral, his breeches Magyar, his coat English, his helmet German. He is cheap, too, the little set of fifteen infantrymen and three cavalrymen costing 26 cents as against the price for the imported powder set of soldiers of $1. The sale of the paper and wooden soldier has gone up from the rate of 3,000,000 a year before the war to 5,000,000 since.

The sales of toy shotguns have also increased. In one firm the employees have been increased from 60 to 180, and they work in day and night shifts. This firm made not only guns, but war games. Their history is interesting because it is so recent. They are an adaptation of the peaceful map game made by the firm before the war, a game of the shortest routes for parcel post or a game to be won by locating the capitals of the states or by naming rivers and harbors.

Cruelty a Trying Fault.

One of the most trying faults to combat in nervous children is cruelty. Fortunately it is not a common one. The difficulties of its early eradication are made possible by the many examples that the child sees of what is apparently deliberate cruelty carried on by adults. He cannot see why it is not wrong to trap and kill mice, to kill fowl, to use worms as bait or to catch flies. He justifies his own acts by those of others. This is what makes the problem a particularly hard one to solve, and it requires the most patient handling to set the child right. Single acts of cruelty in the child need not be a cause for alarm, but persistency in such acts or their occurrence in later childhood should attract attention to both moral and physical needs.

Just So.

"I don't see why the bicycle is so much more popular than the tricycle. I should think it would be much steadier and safer." "There's such a thing as having an excess of material. Like, for instance, trying to walk on three legs."

Boomerang Advice

By SARAH BAXTER

"Dearest," said George Harding the day after the return from their honeymoon as they were opening their accumulated mail at the breakfast table, "here's a letter from Charlie Webster. I wrote him while on our journey how transcendently happy I was."

"You didn't leave me out, did you, love?"

"Oh, certainly not. Charlie writes that he is envious of me and wishes I would tell him how I got you. He says he has been waiting for several years for some nice girl to show a preference for him, but thus far there's nothing doing."

"Nothing doing! I should think not. Does he suppose a girl is going to make love to him while he sits nodding? When you write him again tell him that he must have decision, concentration."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I mean this: The first girl he sees that he feels he'd like to marry let him show his admiration in his expression. If he has been introduced he may do this in one way; if not, in another. Should he meet her in the street or in company he should pursue her till he has learned who she is, then never let up till he has made her acquaintance. We women like to be hunted. It gratifies our pride."

Now, George Harding's business led him to be much on the road. A few days after his return from the wedding journey he gave his wife a couple of dozen kisses and started on a trip. He had enjoyed her to go out whenever she had an opportunity, and since she was not only a devoted autoist, but an excellent driver, she attempted to kill loneliness by afternoon spins into the country. On one of these spins her machine stopped in the middle of the road and, like a balky mule, would go no farther.

The first auto that came along was driven by a gentleman, who pulled up, lifted his cap and asked if he could be of service. Mrs. Harding was a very pretty woman, and the troubled look that appeared in her liquid eyes was enough to soften a heart of brick. The gentleman's eyes expressed admiration in a marked degree. He left his car beside the road and proceeded to make an investigation of the lady's vehicle. Finding that the trouble would compel its removal by outside power, he proposed to secure a rope and pull it to a garage. Anything he suggested was acceptable, and after a hunt for a stout rope in the houses along the road the attachment was made and the journey commenced, the man driving his car, the lady at the wheel of hers. Reaching a garage, her car was left there, and the gentleman begged permission to drive her home.

Mrs. Harding had received admiration in her day, but never anything so suddenly developed as this. It was plain to her that her new found admirer was taking her home by a roundabout way, the necessity for which he attributed to the roads. After an hour's drive that could have been done in ten minutes they pulled up at the Harding residence, the stranger helped the lady out, and, after thanking him for his kindness, she ran up the steps.

The next afternoon what was her surprise on looking out a front window to see her car stop at her door, driven by the gentleman who had rescued her at the wheel. He sprang out, came up to the house and rang the bell. She opened the door herself and received the announcement from her admirer's lips that, fearing she might wish for her car, he had brought it home to her.

In recognition of so much kindness what could she do but ask him in? He gladly accepted the invitation and, seated tete-a-tete with her, spent an hour in bliss for himself and in relieving ennui for the lady. Though recently married, she had not yet got used to turning away the devotion of another man than her husband. When her visitor departed his eyes expressed such a longing to be permitted to call again that Mrs. Harding could not refrain from giving it.

When George Harding returned from his trip his wife casually mentioned her automobile mishap, but, fearing to excite his jealousy, refrained from entering into particulars. Charlie Webster informed his friend that during his absence he (Charlie) had put in practice Mrs. Harding's advice and had profited by it. Indeed, he was plucking up courage to offer his love to a lady and ask her to be his wife. The proposition might seem sudden, and he expected to be refused, but he would act on Mrs. Harding's advice and stick to it.

A few evenings after this George Harding left his wife for a short time. When he returned what was his surprise to see his old friend, Charlie Webster, sitting in the drawing room with Mrs. Harding. She appeared to be a bit rattled, and the two men looked at each other in astonishment.

"This is the gentleman," said the wife, "who was so kind to me when my car broke down."

There was an embarrassed silence for a few moments, when Harding said:

"And you, Charlie, have found a lady to your taste. I wish you success." And, with flashing eyes, he turned on his heel and went upstairs.

There was a triangular soreness over the matter for some time, but eventually Webster was excused since he had acted upon the advice of Harding.

Turner's Little Afterthought.

An English critic's reference to Turner's fine picture "The Wreck Buoy" reminds a faithful newspaper reader of a curious anecdote in connection with it. When Turner first sent this picture to the Royal academy it was hung among several brilliantly colored pictures. On vanishing day Turner found the effect of his dull gray rendering of a stormy sea altogether spoiled by its bright surroundings. Without a moment's hesitation he painted in the lighted buoy in the foreground, and its dab of crimson light showed so brilliantly in its gloomy setting that Turner's picture became the prominent one, and its rivals on each side were cast into the shade. It is curious, if true, that the most noticeable feature of the picture should have been an afterthought.

Esquimo Courtship.

If European death scenes astonish, the consenting "Yes" of a bride at marriage shocks an Eskimo woman. Not only must a bride show herself uncontenting; she must, if she respects herself and tribal traditions, scream and struggle with all her might when her wooer or his envoy enters her family residence and, laying hold upon her, drags her, usually by the topknot, to her new home. She may be presented with a new lamp and water pail by her bridegroom, and she is as a general thing mightily pleased at her change of estate. But she is far too circumspect to show her pleasure or affection and keeps up a noisy demonstration until she feels that she has done all that a well bred maiden should do.

In a Braid.

A youthful bride had undertaken to keep house. She went to the municipal markets of course. One day the man at the vegetable stall displayed, for her admiration, a bunch of fine asparagus, "picked not three hours ago," he said.

The new housekeeper gazed upon the asparagus with unaffected amazement. "Does it grow like that?" she asked. "I always supposed the cook braided the ends of it!"—New York Post.

110 NEARLY-TARS TAKING THEIR SCHOOL AT SEA—ANNUAL CRUISE OF THE NEWPORT WILL OMIT EUROPE, BUT TAKE IN PACIFIC VIA CANAL.

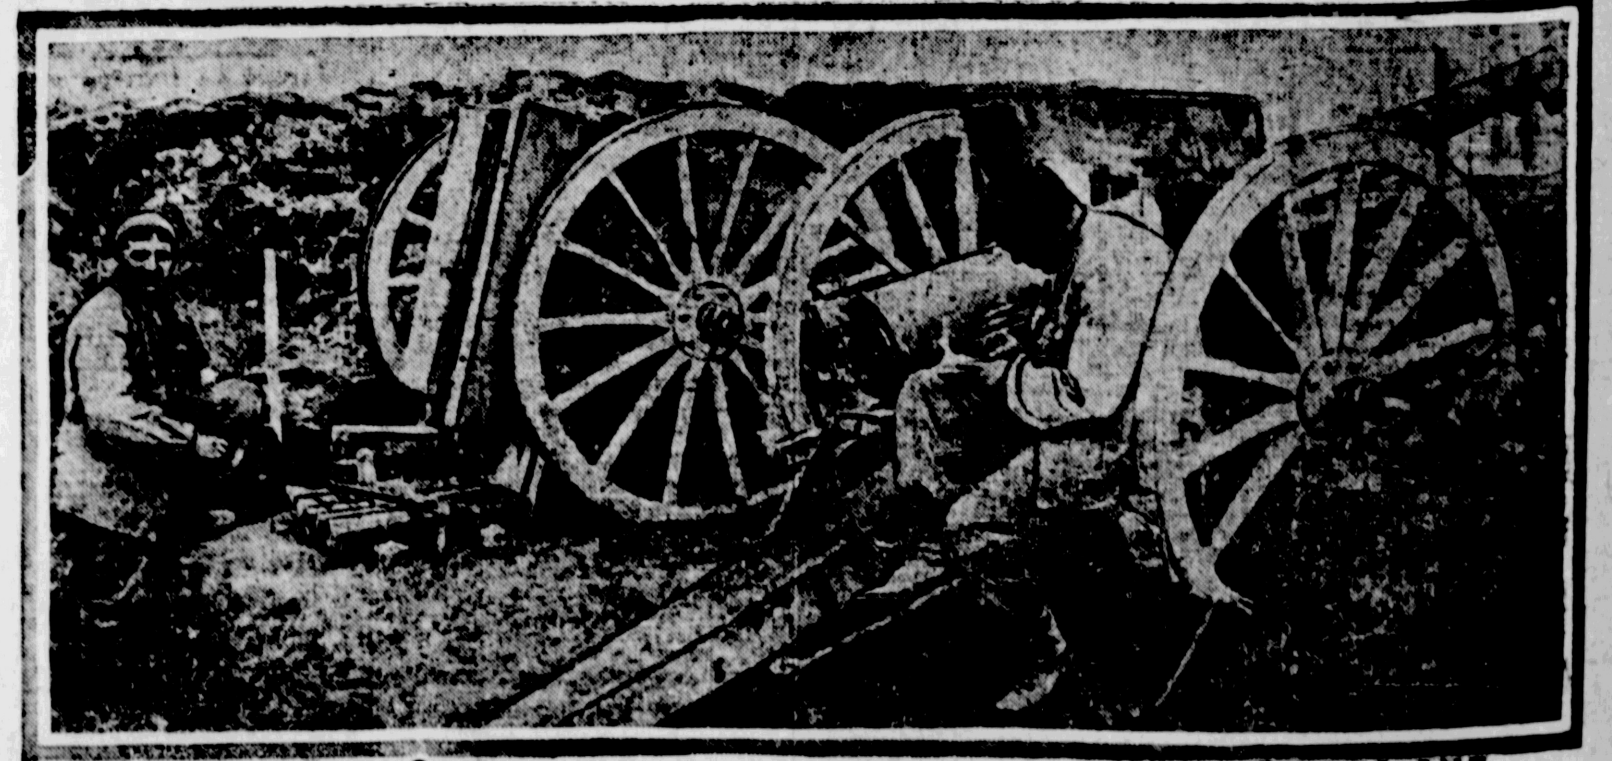

Manned by 110 cadets of the New York Nautical School, the school-ship Newport is now at sea on the first leg of the longest cruise in her history. She will have logged 15,383 miles before she rounds Sandy Hook again on her return journey next fall.

Heretofore the cruise has always been to European waters, but, because of the war, her route has been changed. This time the school-ship will touch at West Indian ports, and then pass through the Panama Canal and head for Honolulu. On her return from Hawaii the Newport will touch at San Francisco, so that the cadets can visit the Exposition. Although their trip will be filled with sightseeing, the cadets will devote many hours to seamanship, nautical science in practice, marine engineering and kindred studies under the instruction of United States navy officers.

GERMAN QUICK FIRING GUN.

A GERMAN RAPID FIRE FIELD PIECE.

Among the great surprises of this war are the new guns, both great and small, which the Germans brought into action, and of which the world previously had no knowledge. To these guns, the light and rapidly moved quick-firing cannons no less than to those of large calibre, the wonderful advance of the Germans last August is mainly due. The picture shows a new model German quick firer and ammunition wagon on the battle line "somewhere in France." Note that the gunner has seized the moment of leisure to write to his loved ones at home.

SUBMARINES GET TWO BRITISH LINERS

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

London, May 7.—Two more British liners have been claimed as victims by German submarines. They are the Candidate, 5,858 tons, and the Centurion, 5,945 tons. Both were torpedoed near Coningbeg lightship, off the coast of Ireland, southeast of Waterford, on Thursday.

The crews of both vessels were saved. Both ships were owned by the Harrison line. Members of the crew of forty of the Candidate that were landed at Milford Haven, a Welsh port on the coast of St. George's channel, gave the following details of the destruction of their ship.

The Candidate was about 15 miles off Waterford harbor when a German submarine suddenly appeared on the surface of the water. A torpedo was fired without any warning and a big hole was knocked in the Candidate's hull below the waterline. As she began to settle the crew took to the boats and rowed away. In the meantime the submarine had submerged herself. After rowing for some time the seamen were picked up by the Grimsby trawler Lord Allendale, off Coningbeg lightship.

The Candidate was outward bound at the time and carried a heavy cargo. She was caught in the steamer lane used by the big Trans-Atlantic liners that ply between the U. S. and England.

The Centurion hailed from Liverpool. She was built in Glasgow in 1908 and was 399 feet long and 51 feet in the beam. According to the latest edition of Lloyd's marine register she was commanded by G. N. Kearne.

Athletics at Wilbur School.

At the athletic events held at School No. 1 this morning the pole vault was won by John Conlin, the broad jump by Harold Sears, the run and jump by L. Peck, who also took the high jump; the one hundred yard dash by George Madden and the sack race by Harry Baker. In the three legged race James Quigley and Reno Bettini were winners. The seniors of room one and two defeated the juniors in the basketball game by the score of 12 to 4. The battery for the winners was Madden and Quigley. The seniors of rooms three and four defeated the juniors by the score of 16 to 8. Roby pitched for the winning team and Conlon was behind the bat.

The person of this birthdate is generous, loyal, kind, a good friend and an ardent lover.

However the nature is suspicious, jealous and in women we find many nagging dispositions and a tendency to exaggerate fancied troubles and personal slights.

The governing sign of this birthdate is Taurus and the planet is Venus.

The study of the laws of mind and a concentration on the power of self control will be of the greatest benefit to this nature.

The happiest marriage is made with one whose birthdate falls between December 21 and January 19 or in the latter part of April.

WAR CLOUD IN EAST
VERY THREATENING

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

What Japan demands of China:

The Chinese government must consult Japan before placing loans or granting concessions for railway building; disputes in Manchuria concerning Japanese settlers must be tried in Japanese courts; the Chinese government must grant to Japan joint farming and manufacturing enterprises in Mongolia; Japan to take over the treaty rights in Shanghai enjoyed by Germany; the Japanese to secure the privilege of establishing schools, churches and hospitals on land leased from China; Japan to finance and control the proposed Nan Chang-Chao-Chow-Fu Railway system.

There are other demands but the foregoing are the most important.

Tien Tsin, China, May 7.—The Japanese minister to China, Eki Hiroki, has prepared to leave Peking. Japanese troops are being moved toward the Manchurian railway, which connects Peking with the Trans-Siberian system.

Russia has massed a big army in Mongolia, which would probably invade Northern China in co-operation with Japanese forces if war is declared.

TORNADO KILLS
TEN IN MISSOURI

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Clarksdale, Miss., May 7.—Ten persons were reported killed and at least 25 injured and property valued at half a million dollars was destroyed by a tornado that swept through a narrow strip of country in this section of the state early today.

The dead were tenants on cotton plantations and the majority of them as well as the injured were negroes.

The greater damage was done between Friars Point, Miss., and Jonestown.

Many cotton-gins, a plantation stores and houses of tenants were demolished.

Torrential rains accompanied the heavy wind and many streams exceeded their banks, flooding thousands of acres of rice bottom-lands. In the Sunflower river district many head of cattle were drowned.

Nearly all the buildings on the large stock farm of King and Anderson, near Friars Point were literally blown away.

Today's storm is supposed to have been an extension of the storm in Arcadia Parish, La., late yesterday, in which 15 negroes were killed.

Wires are prostrated in every direction and railroad traffic is handicapped.

FIRE DESTROYS
TORONTO THEATER

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Toronto, Ont., May 7.—In an early morning blaze, the Princess theater was totally destroyed. The fire was discovered by Constable Mitchell who saw flames suddenly shoot through the roof of the theater. Although five blocks away he immediately rang in an alarm and all the downtown fire brigades responded quickly.

What started the fire is unknown but it appears to have originated in the theater auditorium near the roof, and apparently had been burning for some time before it was discovered.

The actual loss to the theater has not been learned, but scenery and effects amounting to $12,000 were destroyed.

For a time the Prince George and Imperial hotels were threatened and the guests were awakened and advised to be in readiness to leave.

Captain Ike's Mail Boat.

Captain Isaac Houghaling, who carries the mail from South Rondout to this city, has equipped a new mail boat for the quicker transportation of Uncle Sam's mail from that point. It is handsomely painted and bears the words "U. S. Mail" at its stern and the oars are also emblazoned in brilliant colors with the same sign. Captain Houghaling is proud of his new craft and justly so. During the winter he is forced to cross on the ice and had many perilous journeys in the past few years when the ice was breaking up.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, May 7.—Although there were irregular changes at the opening, pressure was in evidence in many stocks and the majority of issues sustained some amount of loss during the first 15 minutes. Much attention was devoted to Anaconda and Amalgamated, because of the official announcement of the dissolution of Amalgamated Copper. The statements made that nothing outside of the payment of $3 cash will be made to Amalgamated stockholders in addition to the distribution of the Anaconda stocks was a disappointment to the speculative element. MENKE'S DAILY SPORTING LETTER

(By Frank G. Menke.)

New York, May 7.—Umpire baiting, the biggest blot on the escutcheon of baseball, could be eliminated if the club owners assessed a heavy fine on every man other than the manager or fired the captain who attempted to argue with the arbitrators.

Umpires are human beings. They aren't dogs. The trouble is that the players think they can call the umpires any and all the foul names that their tongues can form. The practice of umpire baiting besmirches America's national game and it should be stopped.

Umpire baiting is a detriment to the game—and always has been. But it never will stop until club presidents co-operate with league presidents and fine the players for their disgraceful conduct. The most vulnerable part of a player is his pay envelope. If he's swatted there a few times for sums ranging from $25 to $100 it is a cinch bet that he will conduct himself with a certain amount of decency in the future.

What utter folly it is for a player to use abusive language toward an umpire in an effort to get him to change his verdict on a play! The umpires are not infallible, but they work on the theory that they are, and not once in a thousand times do they reverse a decision.

The ball player knows this and he knows that the best he ever gets in an argument with an umpire is the worst of it. Yet hardly a game is played in the big or little leagues that some of the players do not upbraid an umpire for his rulings. Probably the chronic umpire-baiters kick up the fuss in an effort to make a grand-stand play—in a foolish effort to show the fans that they have some of this so-called "pep" and "fighting qualities." The play to the grandstand, however, is a failure. The spectators don't consider umpire-baiting anything other than a boob exhibition on the part of the player, and further proof that the player should have his head examined.

Umpires very often make miserable errors. But they won't change their rulings. The grandstand may groan and it may shout its jeers at the umpires, but it doesn't want its attitude construed as an invitation to the players to rush up and cuss the umpire. It wants the players to play ball; it doesn't want the players to indulge in debates with umpires.

Perhaps in the distant past players really forced umpires to change their decision. But these instances are so rare that they can be counted on one hand. But in the past and in the present there are thousands of cases where players were chased from the game for arguing with the umpires and either suspended for several days, thus weakening their team, or were assessed a nice, fat fine.

The height of folly—that's the real definition of the practice of arguing with umpires.

THORPE NOT TOO OLD OR TOO PROUD TO LEARN.

Jersey City, N. J., May 7.—Jim Thorpe, who came here from the New York National League team, is doing fine work for George Witse with the Skeeters. Jim is one athlete who has shown considerable gray matter in not getting huffy and threatening to jump because he was sent back to the minors for more training.

Early in the season the Indian announced that if he could not grab himself a regular position on the Giants he would prefer to play every day with some minor league team. He figures he has learned about all he can on the bench and that what he needs is the baseball experience that only comes from a regular job.

Thorpe is apt to come back from the minors to the "big leagues" this fall a mighty valuable player, for he is one of the few men who realize their own weaknesses and one of the still rarer ones who is not too proud to publicly correct them.

Music at the Candy Shop.

Louis Hargreaves, who has assumed the management of the Walter Candy Shop on Wall street, will have a grand opening on Saturday and during the day and evening a fine musical program will be given away. Mr. Hargreaves has made a number of alterations to the store and the rear half of the store has been turned into a summer garden which when illuminated at night makes a most attractive picture. Under new management the store promises to be one of the best confectionery stores in the city and the same high standard of excellence that was inaugurated by Mr. Walter will be maintained by Mr. Hargreaves.
